To Die A Horse was an awesome film for me, that I remember watching and enjoying immensely. It was a strange dark cinematic experience and much different to my usual viewing. The details of the film is all there in the official movie trailer, so I don't think I need to go into any more detail other than to say that I had a lot of fun watching it. The film is available to watch for free on Youtube and it is well worth a watch for those who like films of this sort, so I also recommend that you check it out. A #1 NEW YORK TIMES best-selling author on true crime tells her story BY DEBORAH LIU In A Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World, the sickard spent one summer watching the slaughter of the innocents. She couldn't sleep and her words are a first-rate torture, a slow death. L. A. Times columnist Joan Didion spent the summer of 1960 in California where she watched the murder of a young girl named Kitty Genovese. "I never got over it," Didion said, "the destruction of her small life." When Didion was a child, her mother told her about the murders as they happened, in fragments. Each year on her birthday, her mother would take her to public executions, a macabre routine that Didion continued as an adult. She would watch in the back of her mind as a young man became a living corpse. Article by Debra Brown: How Parents Can Support their Children Who Love Stories About Murder By Debra Brown It's never going to stop being a puzzle for me. Although I was raised in a household where murder stories were part of daily conversation, I never once thought I would one day find myself in that situation. But, the truth is, over the last 20 years, in addition to being a magazine writer, I've written about 20 books on true crime. Murder has seeped into my life. Every single time I start a new book, I find myself turning on the television and waiting for the news. Someone is going to get killed. When I first started writing about it, I never read anything that was positive about the murderer. I thought, "They're cruel." It was supposed to be an open secret that serial killers were not nice people. As much as parents and society in general want to believe that someone like Jeffrey Dahmer, a deranged drifter who murdered 17 young men while he attended Northwestern University, can't exist in the real world, we know differently. "He seems to always be one step ahead of the law." The reality is, most serial killers are very real people who are able to mask their heartlessness for decades. "They're creepy and people don't like them," says
