Excel-a-10 The Excel-a-10 (sometimes referred to as the Excel-A-10) was an American trainer aircraft built by Excel Aircraft Company. Design and development The Excel-a-10 was designed as a single-seat biplane trainer to have a higher gross weight than the Excel-A-2. It was a large low-wing aircraft, built with a wooden cowling around the cockpit. The single engine was mounted on a forward-swept nacelle, the first of its kind. The aircraft was tested at the Patterson School of Naval Aviation at Naval Air Station Patuxent River, Maryland in 1947, but the program was cancelled in 1948. You can easily teach your kid this song. I think they have a cute lil voice when they do it. But I've watched the documentary (Video #6), and it shows that the voice isn't theirs. Apparently there is a child actor that they hired to sing all the vocals. However, because of copyright laws, you can't post the video on You Tube, so you will have to go through their stuff: RockBox App summary: The RockBox app includes a VBR MP3 decoder description: |- The RockBox app is an optional, in-depth player for RockBox devices, it

Kirsten Duin has some solid advice for new websites in the post The Visually-Credible Website, and she's right. If you are starting to build your own site, now is a good time to make sure that it looks a little more like the web pages you are most familiar with. The time to start, not later. There are two points Kirsten makes in her article that I think are worth repeating for aspiring writers and coders:The effects of cerebellar stimulation on posture and locomotion in the turtle. Locomotor performance and posture of the turtle, Pseudemys scripta elegans, have been studied after functional excitation of the cerebellar hemispheres. Locomotion was elicited by electrical stimulation of the nucleus fastigius of the right hemibody. The cerebellar stimulation produced an increased amplitude of the hindlimb movement and a new kinematic pattern in which bursts of sequence of contralateral hindlimb lifts are immediately followed by contralateral hindlimb and forelimb movements. This biphasic walking pattern is characterized by a remarkably regular coordination of the hindlimb bursts, and the midfoot lift, which is the salient foot touch-down point in the model of four-bar links. Postural activity was observed in the anterior and posterior regions of the body. The velocities of head movements increased by cerebellar stimulation. Head accelerations were not, however, correlated with the locomotor program. The results suggest that cerebellar stimulation enhances the gait control system by the cerebellum. The procedure of cerebellar
